Winter Mountaineering

Is It For Me?

Develop an in-depth practical knowledge of all the skills required to tackle winter 'scrambling' type terrain, up to grade I/II, on Britain's mountains. It makes the assumption that you have good solid core winter movement skills e.g. use of an ice axe in both ascent/descent as well as crampons.

To get the most from this course previous summer scrambling experience would be useful. Previous winter walking experience (including use of axe and crampons) is essential.

Aim

To introduce you to the technical skills to tackle winter 'scrambling' type terrain, up to grade I on Britain's mountains.

Course Content

You will usually be in a group of no more than four with one instructor. Meeting your instructor on the first morning provides an opportunity to discuss everyone's experience and aspirations enabling the instructor to plan the programme based around these. The main topics to be covered are:

- Re-visiting core winter movement skills using axe and crampons in ascent and descent.
- Movement over grade I/II winter snow and 'scrambling' type terrain.
- Basic rope work and belaying using the rope alone as well as with a sling and krab,
- Constructing and using snow anchors (such as buried axe, snow bollard and Deadman)
- Selecting and using natural rock anchors
- Abseiling using snow anchors
- Avalanche awareness and risk assessment and its implications for safe route choice.
- Winter navigation
- Evening sessions may include a winter hazards talk and avalanche awareness talk.

The programme is fairly flexible taking into account individual needs and aims, weather, etc.
